the thought, as one grizzly is father to another. John knows that the Paunjaub is something about equal to one wild beast, if not several; but does not think it should go roaring around like a lion, seeking where it may catch somebody; for in that case it would become a great deal worse than a volcano, which so vividly reminds poor sinners of the only place where they would not go to see their "respected friends and fellow citizens." It would be nearly as bad as a Congressman like Matteson and morals, and more than a match for for Morrisey in muscle. It would put policemen on their guard, however long they might have neglected the duty of guarding the people. And as its provincial and providential province is to spread itself over, or under, as the case may be, a great many East Indians, which ain't exactly like the West, and a large portion of Uncle John's largest empire, which isn't so large as Brother Jonathan's farm, which farm isn't more than half as large as it is going to be, we think it would be considerably more than a match for a large number of Dead Rabbits, or even the great Giasticutis himself, and would make a good deal more of a muss generally than bleeding Kansas. The Punjaub, in a word, is a many headed monster, at present asleep in the most populous provinces of India. It is very fortunate for our trans-Atlantic "parient" that it is quite just at this time, for if it wasn't it might upset all her calculations and smash all her crockery.

Paris Correspondence of the N. Y. Express. The Head of Oliver Cromwell. Before leaving England I had an opportunity of seeing a great curiosity, a relic of antiquity, which few Englishmen have seen. You will be surprised, and perhaps incredulous, when I say I have seen the head of Oliver Cromwell-not the mere skull, but the head entire, and in a state of remarkable preservation. Its history is authentic, and there is verbal and historical evidence to place the thing beyond cavil. Cromwell died at Hampton Court in 1658, giving the strongest evidence of his earnest religious conviction, and of his sincerity as a Christian. After an imposing funeral pageant, the body having been embalmed, he was buried in Westminister Abbey. On the restoration of the Stuarts he was taken up and hung in Tyburn. Afterwards his head was cut off, a pike driven up through the neck and skull, and exposed on Westminister Hall. It remained there a long while, until, by some violence, the The obligations of the Trust Company are not yet cork-screwed and I curflumixed and rolled in it. What yes or no could answer the question? He hesitated, he stammered—the meeting was against him; he was hustled out of the room, and to this day he labors under the grave imputation, in many people's minds of having feloniously accelerated the death of some unfortunate, and perhaps ill used washerwoman.
